Too Popular.

The "Full" signs which are to be put on the Baltimore street cars recall the story told some years ago by a man of that city who visited Paris, but who was acquainted with no tongue but his own. He related how he made a point of going to all the points around the city, but one he never succeeded in getting to. He was the more determined to go because it was evidently a very popular place as every car going there was loaded to its capacity. But none would stop for him in spite of continued waiting and signaling. "And so," he concluded, "I never got there."

"What was the place?" asked the friend.

"The sign on the cars was 'Complete,'" replied the disappointed one, "but I've never seen 'Complete yet.' And he understood why when his friend explained, after a somewhat explosive smile, that 'Complete' signified only that the car was full, and was not allowed to take on more passengers."

Opening for a Typesetter.

It will surprise some, but not those who know the craft, to be informed that among all the vast company that inhabit Sing Sing prison, one of New York's big penitentiaries, there is not a single Mergenthaler operator, or linotype of any other sort. This is more than could be said of a good many other trades—of even professionals, for that matter—for Sing Sing is noted for its democratic atmosphere, and it forbids no one entrance within its walls because of the nature of his previous employment—Forte and Osgood.
